Incantations For The Festival Of The Farmers And For The Consecration Of Gravel (nīrang ī jashan ī burzigarān o nīrang ī sang-rēzā yaštan)

Daštūr Firoze M. Kotwal

In priestly parlance the term Sang-rēzā is termed ‘sakanjā’ by priests in general. In many countries and cultures of the world the effective power of talismāns and various charms and amulets has been used with great faith by people who believe in the spiritual efficacy of such wonderful objects. The Jews as per their tradition write down certain passages from the Torah on pieces of leather or parchment and tie these amulets to their forehead or near the heart centre. This particular form of talisman was known as phylactery¹. The Muslims copy Arabic verses from the Quran, and use these as amulets. In the same manner, Zoroāstrians have certain short, effective prayers which they call Nīrangs. Nīrang is a Pahlavi word which can also be read as Nērōg, which means strength, power. The belief that a spiritual power, Nērōg, is present within the body of the Nīrang is very old. Zoroāstrians also have a tradition of using the cotton thread (Guj. dōrō) consecrated during the enactment of the Vendidād ritual as a talismān serving as a charmed thread. In order to maintain the purity of this Vendidād thread it is kept safely at home in a small metal box.

As a specimen a short Nīrang of Vanant Yašt along with its translation is given below:

Translation

“All the calamities, the demons, liars, witches, rapacious persons, wizards, foul wind, pain, stomach pain and pain of the seven limbs of the body, evil produced by the Evil Spirit, woes of the heart and sickness of the brain, foul wind producing uneasiness of the mind, evil eye and evil resulted by seeing wicked men, and such other similar calamities may vanish and disappear!”

Jashan ī Burzīgarān

The “Festival of the Farmers” (Jashan ī Burzīgarān) is celebrated when Spendarmad Rōz and Spendarmad Māh coincide on the Zoroastrian calendar. [fn. When the day and the month coincide in the Zoroastrian calendar it is called a Parab/Parabh in Parsi Gujarati, Parva in Skt. and Guj., meaning festival]. Spendarmad Ameshāspand is a female Yazata who is seen as the guardian of the earth and presides over virtuous women. The prosperity of the world depends on the fertility of the earth and all human beings depend upon the earth for food and shelter. Thus rendering the earth pure and fertile for crops to be planted is regarded as a meritorious act in Zoroastrianism.

The sanctification of the earth on Spendarmad Rōz and Spendarmad Māh is a very old Zoroastrian tradition from the days when there were no pesticides or insecticides to destroy pests attacking the crops. In order that harmful insects, noxious creatures, serpents and worms may not harm the earth and the crops sown, the farmers of ancient Iran showed their reverence to the earth by performing this Jashan. On the Jashan ī Burzīgarān, the Pahlavi Nīrang for destroying vermin called Nīrang ī Khrafštar Zadan (Incantation for smiting noxious creatures) is also ceremonially written as a spiritual weapon to destroy insects and pests which attack the crops planted by the Zoroastrian farmers.

The Ink for Writing the Nīrang

The person preparing the Nīrang must have a bath, do the pādyāb-kuštī, and then prepare the ink for the Nīrang, making sure that all the vessels and implements to be used for the purpose are washed and clean. Preferably well-water should be used for the ink. If this is not possible, then cold running water can be used.

This special ink is made from saffron (Guj. kesar). Take as much saffron as required for writing the Nīrang and pound it into fine powder. Warm the water collected earlier and mix saffron powder gradually in this warm water, making just enough ink required for writing the Nīrang. If any ink remains after writing the Nīrang, it should be cast away carefully in the garden or under the shade of a plant or tree.

Paper for Writing the Nīrang

Clean white paper should be used. The Nīrang is written with the ink prepared from saffron as described above. Some Nīrang are written as amulets and worn around the arm or neck. There are some Nīrang where the paper on which the Nīrang is written using saffron ink is soaked in pure well-water and when the saffron diffuses in the water, the person for whom the Nīrang is written is asked to drink this yellow coloured water infused and made holy by the Nīrang written in saffron ink. A small incense burner (Guj. lobāndān) is kept burning alongside and as the person drinks the holy water, blessings are sought from the fire to rid the person of affliction and restore good health.

According to the Persian Rivāyats, this Nīrang should be inscribed on deer leather, or on saffron-coloured paper and placed near the entrance of the house. First a priest knowing Pahlavi does his pādyāb-kustī, recites his obligatory prayers, takes the Bāj of Ardibehesht (pa nām-e yazdān...mazdaδātanqm yazamaide as mentioned at the beginning of the Ardibehesht Yašt) and with the padān (Pers. panām, ‘mouth veil’) tied over his mouth, writes the Nīrang in Pahlavi silently as he is still within the Bāj format. After this, he leaves the Bāj of Ardibehesht (Yaθā Ahū Vairiō 2. Yasnəmca... Kərfə Mozd as mentioned at the end of the Ardibehesht Yašt).

The scriptures clearly state that the Bāj of Ardibehesht should be taken, as Ardibehesht Ameshāspand is a divine physician who heals spiritual, mental and physical ailments. Just as the Pahlavi Nīrang is a formula for removing the power of the evil forces, similarly the Ardibehesht Yašt is efficacious in destroying the creatures that bring harm to man. This Pahlavi Nīrang to annihilate harmful creatures from one’s house is known as ruq’a-ī kazhdum ‘written spells against the bite of scorpions and other obnoxious vermin’.

Translation of the Pahlavi Nīrang

(I begin) in the name of the Creator Ohrmazd. On the day Spandarmad of the month Spandarmad, I fasten the mouth of all noxious creatures, demons, liars, sorcerers, witches, tyrants, evil rulers and evil preachers, sinners, thieves, wolves and oppressors, in the name of the Adorable One, in the name of the brave Faredun, and in the name of Star Canis Major (Tishtar), Star Canopus (Sadwes), Star Vega (Wanand) and the Constellation called the Great Bear (Haptoiring). Truth is the best good; it is happiness. Happiness is to him who is truthful for the sake of best truth.

In all, 4 stars are mentioned.

1- Tishtar, Av. tishtrya (from rt. tish- ‘to shine’). Tishtar is identified as Star Sirius in the constellation Canis Major. He is the Southern leader of the stars. As a Yazata he presides over rains and is the opponent of Apaosha, the Demon of Drought. He is considered as the chief star acting as supervisor over all stars.

- 2- Sadwes, Av. satavaesa ‘having a hundred habitations’. He is also the Southern leader of the stars and opponent of the planet Venus. The identity of Sadwes is disputed. Some identify this star with Canopus in the constellation Carina and others with Antares in the constellation Scorpions.
- 3- Wanand, Av. vanant ‘one who smites or destroys’. Wanand is identified with Vega in the constellation Lyra. He is the destroyer of evil creatures. He is the Western leader of the stars. He is entrusted with the passes and gates of Mt. Alburz to drive away the demons and demonesses so that they may not cut off the passages of the sun, moon and stars. In Navsari a jashan ceremony is performed annually in honour of Wanand Yazad on the day Hormazd of the month Frawardin in Aiwisruthrem Gāh, since the star appears in the west at night of that day.
- 4- Haftoiring, Av. haptoiring. He is the Northern leader of the stars. He is in the constellation of the Great Bear Ursa Major. He is entrusted with the gate and passage of hell for keeping back the demons who are in opposition to the celestial sphere and the constellations of the Zodiac. Formerly a Drōn ceremony in honour of Haftoiring used to be performed on the day Tir of any month, because Haftoiring is a co-worker of Tishtrya.

After pasting the Nīrang on the wall of the house closest to the front door, according to tradition, the house is fumigated with a combination of storax (ištarak), shavings from the horn of a sheep or a goat, frankincense (bōy), wild rue (sipand), and cotton seeds, which are gently burned on a slow fire. Storax is a gum-like resin that oozes out of trees, and wild rue is an herb found growing in Iran. When these plants are burned the smoke emitted is very strong and acrid. Shakespeare and other classical writers term rue as the “herb of grace” as it has the properties to exorcise evil.

In the Rivāyats there is an injunction to colour cattle, goat, sheep and fowl with saffron on this important day. But in the villages of India, on Bahman Māh, Bahman Rōz, which is celebrated as the parabh (festival) of Bahman or the ‘feast of cattle’, they are coloured with a vermillion powder (kanku).

Nīrang ī Sang-rēzā Yaştan (Nīrang for Consecrating the Gravel)

On Spendarmad Māh, Spendarmad Rōz, in honour of the earth, the priest prepares the gravel for consecration in the precincts of the Dar-ī Mihr or any other place which is purified for the ceremonial purpose. This act of consecration is called Nīrang ī Sang-rēzā (Arabic: sang-reza ‘gravel’). During this ritual, the priest inserts a knife in the purified sand and takes the Bāj of Spendarmad Ameshāspand. He then intones the following Nīrang and recites it silently:

Māh spendārmad, rōz spendārmad, rōz spendārmad, māh spendārmad, spendārmad māh, spendārmad rōz, baštam zahr va wiš o zoḡr ī hamā xrafaštārān, pa nām ō nīrōē nēw farīdun va ayāriē vanant štarē hōrmazd-dāt, gōāfrangān rawā bād, aēdūn bād, ašem baēšaz bād, zanam ōzanam: gunāh guzārašne kerfe rawān dušāram rāy.

“On the month Spandārmad, day Spandārmad, the day Spandārmad of the month Spandārmad, Spandārmad month and Spandārmad day, I bind the poison and venom (spewing from) the mouth of all noxious creatures, in the name of heroic and brave Farīdūn and with the help of the Star Vega, created by Hormazd; may it (i.e. the Nīrang) be steadfast and current: may it be so; may righteousness be healing. I smite and kill (all noxious creatures). May sins be atoned for with (the increase of) good deeds for the delight of the soul”.

After completing the Nīrang the priest recites one Yaθā Ahū Vairiō aloud and upon the word šiiāoθananqm he turns the gravel up and down with the knife as mentioned in Pāw-mahal manuscripts. After repeating this process seven times, he leaves the Bāj of Spendārmad, and the gravel which is consecrated in this manner is sprinkled in all corners of the house, as well as in the fields, thus ensuring the removal of noxious creatures from the area for the whole year around.

Among the extant Nīrangs, there are some in which King Farīdūn is remembered and his assistance is sought. Farīdūn Āthwyān was a spiritual healer who is credited with having found many cures for physical ailments. For this reason, in the Pahlavi text of the Dādeštān ī Dēnīg, he is given the title of Pur-Bēshaz i.e., one who is full of remedies. In the present times also, many religious-minded Zoroastrians commission a Bāj and Āfrīnagān in honour of Farīdūn Āthwyān, in order to be cured of physical ailments and be rid of difficulties. Their confidence in Farīdūn is based on the exaltation of Farīdūn as a proficient medic, in this Nīrang.

Some of our co-religionists through doubt and despair, during difficult times, lose sight of the right path and frequent ascetics (bāwās), demon-exorcists (bhuvās), anchorites (sādhus) and mendicants with long hair (shevdās) with no gainful result in sight. Instead, if they turn to our glorious religious traditions, they would certainly get miraculous help from the unseen divine powers of our faith.

With deep regret, it has to be stated that barring a few exceptions, these Nīrangs are not resorted to as much as they should. Nīrangs are precious hidden treasures which can be used with great effect by priests with a high degree of ritual power. The prevalent ignorance about these Nīrangs and their usage affects the ability of the community to use the miraculous powers of the Nīrangs for their well-being, and for the Parsi community this lapse makes it an even more difficult task to maintain the religious traditions of the faith.

It is hoped that devout Dašturs and Mobeds will make greater use of the above Nīrang on the parabh of Spendārmad and thus contribute towards the prosperity of the world.
